

The Emerging Voice

An Experiential Professional Development Workshop for Creative Arts Practitioners

May 1 & 2, 2010

This workshop is relevant to practitioners from the creative arts field who wish to strengthen their confidence in using their own voices and in working with the voices of their clients across the singing speaking spectrum.

How we use our voices and tune into the voices of others can significantly affect and inform our work as practitioners. Voices reveal moment to moment changes in emotional states, patterns of thinking and bodily experiencing. Developing ease with voice work and singing in our work as practitioners can lead to interventions that may include spontaneous expression through singing, the use of songs, vocal doubling and coaching.

The workshop will foreground the auditory world and will include a process of freeing up the voice. Participants will engage across the spectrum of sound making from speech to singing. They will become attuned to breath, sound, silence, resonance, harmony, dissonance, speech, rhythmic qualities of speech and timing.

There will be psychodramatic vignettes, co-created vocal improvisations, and a working with the emerging themes of the group through song and spoken word.

The Facilitator:

Hilde Knottenbelt is a Voice Teacher and Psychodramatist and the originator of the Creative Voice process. She has run Creative Voice workshops and ongoing groups since 1987 and has assisted many people to connect with their voices as an instrument for song, self expression and play. Her work is informed by a wide range of sources including a cappella singing and improvising, playback theatre, psychodrama, group work training and body-focused therapies. Hilde is on the teaching staff of the Australian College of Psychodrama. She has worked sessionally at MIECAT in both the Graduate Diploma and the MA by Supervision programs since 2006. Hilde has a private practice in Voice Work and counselling.
